1. Discussion: The Book

The book continues pretty much as it was last May but I have been working away on a project that will be of assistance to me as I go back into the census. I must work my way forwards as well as backwards preparing the genealogical charts for the Pencombe family of North Molton commonly surnamed as Pincombe although some members of the family did choose to use Pinkham hence this study as long as I have managed it at the Guild of one-name Studies has been using both Pincombe and Pinkham as the study names which was the way that the original researchers set it up (namely Galen Pinkham and Dr Richard Pinkham).

The next chapter that I am going to write is going to be some work on the autosomal DNA because various lengths on different chromosomes appear to be a constant in family lines. I think it will be interesting to spend a little time exploring that especially with the Living DNA results.

I am also continuing to look at records in Herefordshire to discover more about this likely ancestral path back for the Pencombe/Pincombe family prior to their arrival at North Molton with John Lord Zouch in 1486. I still do not know in what capacity the likely John Pencombe accompanied John Lord Zouch. I must admit though that I am beginning to consider that he was more his jailer than a friend or retainer since he did receive land noted in the Land Records of 1524-27. I did have an initial thought that the land was given to him by John Lord Zouch and I still have not been able to determine the status of John Pencombe on arrival. I do know that he had some financial difficulties in Herefordshire which complicated his position there so one is left with the thought that this was a paid accompaniment and likely it was the King making use of loyal retainers to handle the aristocratic class that had supported Richard III but were willing to accept the new King (Henry VII) as time passed. Eliminating the land owners was not a very practical thing in reality simply because of loyalties between the Lord of the property and his workers. Convincing the aristocrats to accept him was likely a more practical method for the King to follow.

2. DNA and its value in the study

I continue deferring any discussion on YDNA within the study but I may have some interesting autosomal DNA results that could be interesting at some point in this next year or so. I have a lot of known Pincombe results from my autosomal DNA studies but this is pretty much restricted to 5th cousins or closer although surprisingly DNA has managed to take me a tiny way back from that on occasion.
